GREAT DAY IN RUMFORD FALLS.

1st Regiment Uniform Rank K. of P. Met Here
Sept. 27.

Entertained by Pettengill Co. No. 29.

September 27th dawned with cloudy weather, and when the Pettengill Company formed on Congress street to march to the railway station to meet the 1st Regiment Uniform Rank Knights of Pythias, at 10:30 a. m., was descending quite capriciously. When the train, bringing some two hundred knights from several different towns and cities, arrived, the rain was falling. The visiting knights marched directly to the hall of Metal Lodge, escorted by the Pettengill company.

After a brief stay at the hall they were given directions to proceed to the Universalist and Methodist churches, where bountiful dinners had been prepared by the ladies of those churches.

Following the fact that the knights, as they came from the river via foot bridge, stepped church came first in view. Many of them were as could get to the rest continued up the hill. Most of them found their way to the Universalist vestry, among them being several of the officers. A few went to the Methodist church.

The Baptist ladies had prepared a dinner for the occasion. The dinner the procession formed and marched on to the Baptist church, where the program of the evening was carried out. By one o'clock the knights and the rest of the company were seated for the evening. The program centered in the song of the women came into possession of the Cumming's silver cup.

Fat Men's Race.
Col. Frank E. Baker, Damon Co., 1st; George Horton, Pettengill Co., 2d; Lieut. Sam Swift, Pettengill Co., 3rd. Hop, Skip and Jump.

The ball game was between the Pettengill Co. team, and a picked team from the other companies. A. E. Frecker captained the home team, and E. Southard was captain of the picked team.

Following the sports there was an exhibition drill by the Pettengill Company under the direction of the Captain, Harry J. Ladd.

The knights then formed a parade line and headed by the Rumford Falls band, marched through the principal streets, including Strathglass Park.

After breaking ranks no regular program was followed, until the gathering for the grand military ball in the Opera House in the evening began.

The exercises were begun by singing. A chorus of fifteen young girls, singing the Star Spangled Banner, all prettily arrayed in white, with sashes of red, and each was decorated with a flag, the subject of their song.

SUBURBAN VIEWS ON THE ELECTRIC RAILWAY.

Some Want it to go One Route, Others Another Way--All Want it Anyway.

The hope that has been in the minds of everyone in this part of Oxford county that an Electric Railway would be built between Rumford Falls and Bethel, is made manifest by the talk heard everywhere, since our announcement that a road would be built in the spring.

In the hotels, stores, offices, shops and factories, there is but one sentiment, at least but one is expressed, and if any are feeling otherwise they keep quiet. The residents along the proposed route are perhaps as well pleased as are the people of Bethel and Rumford Falls.

The reporter found the East and North Rumford people very much in earnest, and discussing the prospects and the possibilities of the line running over certain routes. The Littlefield section feel that the line should go round their way, and claim that a larger number of homes would be reached than by following the river road.

The truth of the matter seems to be that everyone is favorable, whether the line goes a quarter or half, or two miles, more or less, away. But all hope the track will be laid as closely as possible to their own homes.

It is understood that there is an effort being made to influence the directors in favor of one particular route. The directors were seen and expressed no opinion regarding the matter, only giving out that which ever route can be selected at the least cost will receive their sanction, providing of course, all other advantages are equal.

FACTS ABOUT PANAMA

Told to the Citizen by a Former Resident of Rumford, who Knows what He is Talking About.

Mr. Walter H. Stevens of Gorgona, Republic of Panama, was in Rumford Falls last week visiting his boyhood home, which was at Eaton hill. Mr. Stevens left Rumford when 17 years old. His parents then moved to Winthrop where they now live. His father, Samuel Stevens, was 80 years old, as well remembered by the older residents of the town.

From 1881 to 1884 the young Mr. Stevens was in Wisconsin, where he followed the millwright trade. He then returned east, and with the exception of a brief residence at Augusta, made his home in Malden, Mass., where for sixteen years he carried on a big contracting and building business.

In August of 1904, he was appointed to a position in the canal zone by the government. He sailed from New York Sept. 6, and was six days on the way to the distant being 10,000 miles. The landing was at Colon.

Colon is the Atlantic port. It is a small, only separated from the main land by a narrow strait. Mr. Stevens, upon the north side the water at high tide covers a wide flat area, and the nature of the soil is very fertile. The land is very fertile, and the people are very happy.

The program of the evening was carried out. By one o'clock the knights and the rest of the company were seated for the evening. The program centered in the song of the women came into possession of the Cumming's silver cup.

a man who made a flying visit, or of one whose life had been lived where the standard of enterprise is nearer that of equatorial countries, than is ours.

Mr. Stevens says the negroes mostly of the West Indian type, are paid 50 cents per day for common laborers, and from $1.25 to $1.50 per day for skilled mechanics. This is reckoned in American money—in the native coin, it would be about half as much. The day is ample and all they earn, for 8 or 10 of them are only equal to one white man. All the hard work is done by these negroes. All the white men are superintendents and foremen.

The negroes (white men) receive 50 cents an hour, 8 hours per day. Machineists and foundry men get 65 cents an hour and plenty of overtime work if they want it. The government furnishes quarters for the white men. Single men are assigned two to one room. Married men have tenements. These are free of cost to the men. The negroes have camps, and do their own cooking, which is all done out doors.

Mr. Stevens, while not rating the negroes very highly as workmen, speaks favorably of their morals. The number of the Spanish English and more or less thoroughly connected with the English church. They do not drink, and are very industrious. They are very happy, and are very happy.

The program of the evening was carried out. By one o'clock the knights and the rest of the company were seated for the evening. The program centered in the song of the women came into possession of the Cumming's silver cup.

RECITAL.

Under the Auspices of the Clan Catholonia, By Miss Russell.

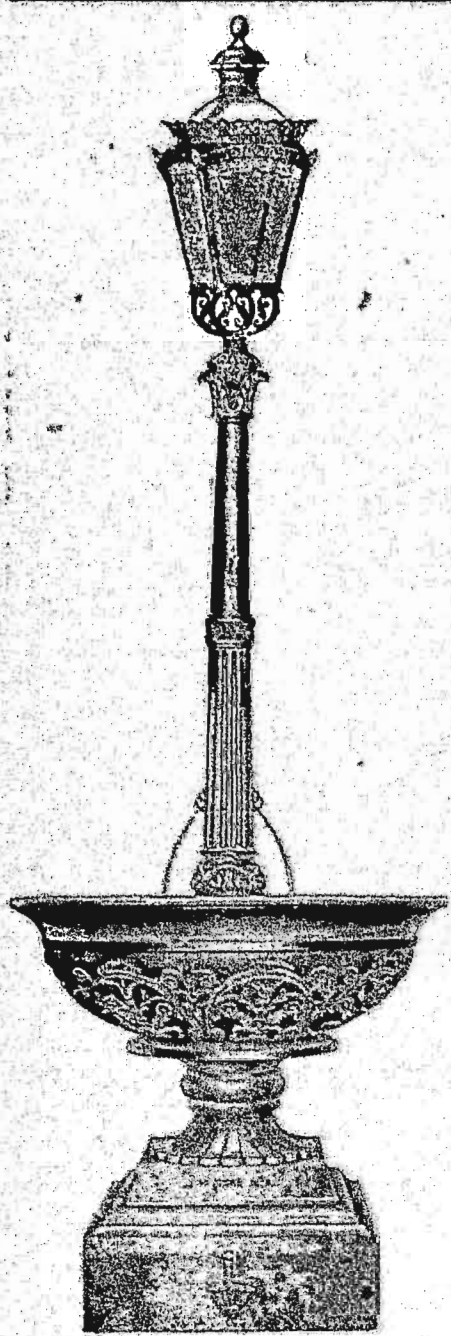

A fair sized audience greeted Miss Russell and throughout the evening manifested its appreciation by frequent applause. Miss Russell was ably assisted by Mr. Arthur Cushman of Rumford Falls, Miss Anna Walker of Peru, and Mrs. Dickey of Mexico, who read several selections. Miss Russell is to be congratulated upon the success of the recital, and the ability of her assistants, as well as upon the superiority of her own performance. Miss Russell has a voice of exceptional natural quality, and has cultivated it to a high degree of purity. The affair was under the direction of Daniel McMaster.

NEW CLOTHING STORE.

Y. Steinfield & Co. announce the opening of their new clothing store, No. 221 Waldo Street, in Rumford Falls. The store has been renovated and arranged for the special purpose of a clothing store.

Mr. Steinfield, who has been in Rumford Falls for the past two years, was 15 years in the clothing business in Berlin, N. H. He is an agreeable man to meet and has the reputation of giving good value for money received. In his new venture he will have the assistance of his son, Max Steinfield, a young man of experience, who has recently returned from Philadelphia, where he has been engaged in a large clothing store for the past year. He also has in his employ, Fred Sampson, a well known young man in town. We extend the hand of welcome to this new firm, and wish them abundant success.

No effort will be spared to make this page of interest and value to the people of Andover. Your co-operation is solicited.

New Drinking Fountain.

Andover is justly proud of the new drinking fountain which has recently been placed in position on Main street opposite the Commons.

Not alone on account of its usefulness and the fact that it is a fountain that any town of triple its size might well be proud of; but because it represents the work of Andover's enterprising women.

For over a year the King's Daughters of Andover, have been giving fairs, plays, etc., with this object in view; their time, money, work and thoughts have been toward this end.

Now that the fountain is here and running, Andover will certainly appreciate their efforts. Thanks are also due to the summer visitors and others who so freely helped and to the men who gave their time and labor in fixing the water supply and setting up the fountain.

The fountain itself is made of iron painted with aluminum bronze. It is 10 feet 2 inches high and consists of a circular basin 4 feet 7 inches in diameter, set on a base 33 inches square, and surmounted by a post 6 feet high in which is an electric light, the power for which is supplied by Frank McAllister.

There are two streams of water which will run continuously, and two faucets with cups for people to drink from; in the base is a small basin for dogs.

The water comes from a spring situated over half a mile away on the side of Farrington Hill, the source being 200 feet above the fountain.

Arthur Lang, our popular barber, has improved his shop by putting in a very handsome quartered oak wall fixture. It was made by William Gashman and is certainly a work of art.

Walter Barnes has returned from a three days' trip to Boston. Marston's lumber camp opened last Wednesday.

J. Lyman Ripley returned last Wednesday from a trip to Rumford Falls. He visited the county fair.

Rev. Francis Grover, who has been a guest at Glenellis since the first of August, returned to his home in Augusta last week.

Miss Bessie Turner of Malden, Mass., is a guest of Mrs. F. E. Leslie at Glenellis.

Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Abbott visited the Canton fair last Wednesday.

While working at Baker Thurston's lumber camp at Surplus Pond, last Thursday, Elmer Bailey had the misfortune to slip and cut his foot with an axe. He was attended by Dr. Leslie and is doing well.

Fred Russell's new house is rapidly nearing completion. It is to be modern in all its appointments, hot and cold water, bathroom, etc. The view from this house is one of the prettiest in Andover, and its location among the trees, makes it an ideal spot.

A petition is being circulated in behalf of Binsley Akeris for postmaster, to take the place of Frank Thomas

Several parties have gone to C. Pond for the purpose of getting deer.

Northland Caroline of The Pines Stock Farm, after winning the first heat of a race at Canton fair, and while well in the lead in the second heat, had the misfortune to break her leg while on the first quarter. She is by Quartermaster (dam Orbine 2.13½) and has a record of 2.23½. Mr. Gregg when seen by our reporter stated that he was quite confident that she would fully recover. She was brought home from Canton last Monday on a drag.

Mr. E. L. Fisher, who has been until lately at Bethel, has come to The Pines Stock Farm, and will assist Mr. Gregg in training and driving. Mr. Fisher has driven a number of horses below 2.10; perhaps the most celebrated one being Martha Walker, at that time the champion race mare of the world. It is expected that The Pines will be well represented in the New York trades next year.

Willard Newhall has finished shingling his house on Main street.

At the regular meeting of the Lone Mountain Grange Sept. 23, the third and fourth degrees were conferred upon nine candidates. This was followed by a well prepared program of entertainment. The guests of the evening were Brother Torrey, the Grange State Deputy of Oxford county, and sister of Dixfield, Brother Frank Hoyt and daughters of Rumford. Refreshments consisting of doughnuts, coffee, cake and confectionery were served in the hall which was prettily decorated with autumn foliage. About one hundred were present.

The next regular meeting of the Lone Mountain Grange will be an all day meeting Oct. 13.

Can you win? You realize that to win in anything these days, requires strength, with mind and body in tune. A man or woman with disordered digestive organs is not in shape for a day's work or a day's play. How can they expect to win? Kodak For Dyspepsia contains the digestive juices of a healthy stomach and will put your stomach in shape to perform its important function of supplying the body and brain with strength building blood. Digests what you eat, relieves indigestion, dyspepsia, sour stomach, palpitation of the heart and constipation. Sold by all druggists.

The weather man is indeed with us this year, as he has been with the fairs elsewhere. The officers of the association have as usual seen to it that no stone has been left unturned to make the Andover fair come up to its former record of being one of the fairs that everyone likes to go to, because it is here that they find something worth coming to. Andover people do nothing by halves and their fair is no exception to the rule which governs the doing of everything.

This is a two days' fair and each one is better than the other. As the Citizen goes to press, the first day is under full swing. The hall exhibits are coming thick and fast, in fact they are in to such an extent as to equal, and perhaps exceed the average exhibit of former years.

The clatter and clang along the midway is amusing, to say the least. The fair is indeed in evidence and if the sale of his wares is to be judged by his noise, he is doing a rattling business.

The horse trot is always the chief attraction and this year a fine field on the grounds and good racing is assured. The schedule of races is as follows:

Wednesday.
2.10 class.	Purse $75.00
2.26 class.	Purse $100.00
Thursday.
2.10 class.	Purse $75.00

Retrospective and Prospective Announcement

About six months ago I opened my store. From then until now my trade has been larger than I even hoped for.

This evidence of public appreciation is very pleasing to me, and I wish to thank my patrons and the public generally for their support in my venture.

To merit a continuance and increase of patronage, I shall always keep the quality of the stock up to the present high standard of excellence.

For the purpose of disposing of some goods that are occupying space that Christmas goods already arriving require, I wish to specialize some lines that I have a slight over stock of, and will sell at prices that will be worth a trip to town to know about.

Crockery and china ware, kitchen furnishings, school supplies, and a fine line of jardineers, and similar goods in variety and quality so numerous that announcement of price is only possible as you look them over.

Among our staple specialties are wedding and birthday gifts, cut glass and Japan Chinaware.

I have just added a fine high grade line of confectionery. Chocolates and bon bons will be of the richest quality.

I wish again to thank the public for their generous patronage, and to say that I am always glad to meet people at the store, whether they come as buyers or sightseers.

In closing I will say that my Christmas goods are to be well worth seeing---don't forget that my store is headquarters for TOYS.

Respectfully yours,

F. H. Richardson,

A MERE YOUTH

Testifies to Drinking Large Quantities of Rum.

The case of Geo. B. Benson, charged with the illegal sale of liquor at Canton fair grounds, occupied the forenoon session of the Municipal court Saturday.

Benson was entirely a different kind of a man than ordinarily comes before this court charged with violation of the liquor laws, and the case presented several features rather unusual, and the testimony revealed some peculiar facts.

The arrest and seizure was made by Sturgis Deputies, Allen and Bisbee at the fair grounds Thursday forenoon. Mr. Allen testified that he observed many persons going and coming from the tent occupied by the respondent, and some of them were intoxicated. He conferred with Mr. Bisbee, and they made a raid upon the place, and found several intoxicated persons, among them being a woman, whom he testified, paid for six glasses of beer, after he and Mr. Bisbee entered the tent. The only whiskey found was a quart bottle two-thirds full. The beer was various kinds of Uno, and lawful to sell.

Mr. Bisbee in his testimony, said he had been suspicious of the place, and that morning followed a well known character, whom he said would find liquor if any was for sale on the grounds. That man went directly to Benson's tent. He corroborated Allen's testimony about the seizure and condition of things in the tent.

The respondent was called. He was a man of keen mind, and his testimony was given in a straightforward manner that showed him to be an alert man of business; and he would have made a favorable impression, but for some fatal defects, not in the testimony but in the facts. Benson said he came from Hallowell where he lived. Said he had been to two fairs before going to Canton, and had sold Uno beer and cigars, as at Canton. Said the bottle of whiskey he bought on the grounds for his own use, and what was gone from it, he had taken in two drinks, allowing a small drink to have been given to a young man employe.

Said the woman was intoxicated when she came to his tent. Never had seen her before. He testified that she had a scrap with one of the men out side the tent. Benson said he was a drinking man and drank whiskey every day if he could get it.

Mr. Benson gave a very interesting and lucid explanation of the different kinds of Uno beer, and exposed some of the tricks of the trade, much to the edification of the court.

Lawyer Parker, who appeared for the state, cross examined the witness, and assuming an irritating manner, calculated to bring to the respondent's memory some matters that might throw some light upon the case, questioned him in a style that nettled the opposing counsel, Mr. Stearns.

Mr. Stearns asked Mr. Parker to ask the questions in as gentlemanly a manner as his client answered, saying, "If you will not do so, it is because that's your nature." After this Mr. Parker was more mild in his manner, and the prisoner recovered his composure.

George Aragh, also of Hallowell, and an employe of Mr. Benson's testified substantially as did Mr. Benson. He was a young man, and showed some slight resentment because of the proceedings.

James Skidmore, a mere youth, and also an employe of Benson's, gave similar testimony to the two former witnesses. The striking features of his evidence were the disclosures regarding the amount of rum he had drank and the care he and Aragh had been to, to keep their employer from drinking to excess.

Allen and Bisbee were recalled, and testified that they had taken great care to note if any odor of whiskey came from Benson's breath at the time of arrest, and they found no indication that he had been drinking, although Benson says he had just taken two very large drinks out of the bottle.

If Benson had not testified to giving the youth liquor, his case would have appeared stronger to the jury mind, although the judicial mind could not consider that feature in giving judgment.

The court found Benson guilty and gave him the full limit of the law, from which an appeal was taken.

THE CITIZEN SIGHT SEER

Takes a Stroll--Some of the Things He Saw.

There is always something to see and hear in E. K. Day's great department store, and among the many things that looked good enough to write about, the Citizen sight seer was in some bewilderment, and sought out Mr. Martin and asked for the newest thing in the store, and without much preliminary, Mr. Martin conducted the scribe up into the balcony, and introduced him to Miss Mabel Knapp, and at first thought it appeared that Mr. Martin had misunderstood the meaning and thought the inquiry was for the best thing in the store. However that may have been, and the scribe has no opinion to the contrary, Miss Knapp really had charge of the newest feature of the business.

She represents Brainard & Armstrong, who send her from store to store throughout New England, instructing the women in art embroidery. The E. K. Day Company carry in stock that firm's full line of stamped sofa pillows, and colored center pieces. Any customer buying one of these stamped pieces is entitled to free instruction in the embroidery work. The lessons are one hour in length. More than one lesson is given if necessary.

Miss Knapp will remain in this store until Saturday evening next. She spends two weeks in stores of this size; but one week is sufficient in most towns where she goes. A supply of Christmas novelties in stamped work is on the way and will soon arrive and be on exhibition.

One of the great front show windows has been given up to display of the finished work, and is a splendid demonstration of the power of the needle and silk to work out handsome embroidery designs when in the hands of a skillful woman.

No one goes into this store without descending to the basement and seeing the vast layout of crockery and novelty ware. Many do not know that this is a business separate from the E. K. Day Co., but it is, and the proprietor, G. A. Peabody, is one of the most independent men in town--in this we do not mean that he is egotistical, but that in selling his goods he is not bound by any agreement that prevents his customers getting a fair deal--a square deal.

His upstairs show window last week attracted much attention, and must have caused the sale of many sets of dinner dishes, for a magnificent set was displayed at a price that made folks stop and think.

That is the sort of a man Mr. Peabody is, and his stock always has good buying propositions.

The sight seer called to get a little information from Morris Marx in reference to some new stock that he has just received, also to find out about a new clerk that is to have charge of the north store, where the clothing and men's furnishings are kept.

After looking over the new stock which is largely in goods interesting to women, and in fact has been bought for the great fall opening, Mr. Marx, Mrs. Marx and the head clerk, Mr. D. A. Nowell, jointly entertained the writer with accounts of the development of the various departments of the business, and the great care they all assume in keeping everything up-to-date, and the goods required by their customers.

It was evident that they all knew their business well, for every line was complete; but the most noticeable was the immense quantity and variety of women's garments. Rows of skirts were hanging from six or seven frames, closely packed, and it would be impossible for a woman to fail to find a suitable garment among them. Mr. Marx was formerly in business in the west, but came here some years ago, and has made a great success in Rumford Falls.

The new clerk is not new after all, for he was formerly employed here by Mr. Marx, and although he has been away more than a year, no one has forgotten Charles Brownley, who is to have charge of the clothing department. Mr. Brownley was popular both in the store and the social life of the town.

Mr. Marx has a double store, and not a corner, nor a shelf that is not taken up with merchandise of salable quality.

The Citizen man, while strolling about the town in quest of new acquaintances, and items of news, was attracted to the carriage shop of C. G. Prior on Prospect Avenue. Mr. Prior and his boys were all hard at work.

The fact is that advertising has paid the firm so well that they have more business than they can easily care for. They all roll up their sleeves and make the hammers ring and the sparks fly--in fact the sparks flew so thickly that the writer escaped into the rear shop where he found the well known Oxford county auctioneer, C. H. Eaton, who is a carriage-maker by trade, and when not engaged in selling or appraising goods, or buying for speculation, works for Mr. Price. Mr. Eaton is a man of wide experience and sound judgment, and the Citizen man felt well repaid for his visit to that shop of flying sparks and busy men.

THE TITLE GENTLEMAN

Describes One Kind of Man in England--Quite Another in America.

Secretary Bonaparte's Definition of a Gentleman Follows.

"Its essential meaning is that of you are required a measure of self-control, a readiness of self-sacrifice, a sensitiveness in honor which it might not be reasonable to expect of all your fellow citizens."

The gentlemen in England are understood to be a sort of titled character, and none of the men of that country who are classed as common, ever think of calling themselves gentlemen. The title is really used to distinguish classes, and the finest character man among the common people would feel out of place, were he classed as a gentleman, and likewise the greatest reprobate of the so-called upper class would be grievously offended were he called common.

The people of that country are educated to that sort of thing; and when a common man comes to the United States, and hears himself referred to as a gentleman, he is apt to think he has created the impression that he belongs to the nobility. (?)

Strange as it seems to us in America, the natives of England, among the common herd, are quite satisfied with the condition, and wherever they may be they are quite apt to defend the social and governmental system of Great Britain. They are carefully educated that way.

Under the influence of free government and the fall of empires, the whole people of this new republic adopted the idea that all men were gentlemen, and in short time the title came to distinguish a man of kindly and moral character, and good manners. Substantially that meaning still holds, but the influence of English custom is having its effect upon some minds here, and an effort to create a gentlemen class is really under way.

The above definition of a gentleman, by Secretary of the Navy, Bonaparte, is somewhat along that line, inasmuch as the qualities he defines, are not expected of all. When we cease to expect or hope for the best, we are letting go of our fundamental principles of government and society.

It were better to define a gentleman as a man of honesty, and possessed of a kindly heart. That at least will keep the meaning within the original American compass, and offer an exact contrast to the English definition.

Queen Elizabeth is not on record with a definition of a gentleman; but in connection with the subject, it may be well to remind the public that one of her means of knowing a "lady" from a common woman was by the quality of profanity she used.

As women were morally superior to men, then as now, we may from this get an inkling of the standard of English gentleness in the time of the Stuarts.

Plans are being made to continue extensively the improvements which are being made to the Eastern Steamship Co. wharf at Gardiner. The coal shed is to be extended so that it will occupy the entire width of the lower end of the wharf, which is being rebuilt. The freight house floor will be relaid, and the building in which the waiting room and office are located will be rebuilt to give more room for the office, which is altogether too small for its purpose. A row of oak piles are to be driven along the front of the wharf to strengthen it, and a pile driver and a scow with lumber and piles, arrived Tuesday to do the work.

STUDY PROHIBITION.

Distinguished Finns in Maine For This Purpose.

Prohibition in the state of Sweden? That is what Bjorn Schuman, Burgomaster of the city of Helsingfors, Finland, and Allan Zillia, of the same place, want to find out. They came all the way from their native place far over the waters of the Atlantic to find out. They, with a member, a literary man, arrived at this Thursday morning and will there two or three days investigating into the workings of the prohibition law in that city.

Burgomaster in Finland holds the office as a mayor in our American cities. This is the office that is held by Bjorn Schuman, and he is also a member of the Finland Diet. The members of the party are not prohibitionists. They are here to form an unbiased opinion of the conditions as they see them in the state of Maine. They will report back their findings and their opinion as to how the Maine law would work in their native country.

In Finland, at the present time, the Gothenburg system is in effect and this is virtually a local option law. The question is as to whether it would be better to change this to prohibition. After they have completed their visit to Portland, it is understood that they will go to Bangor and Augusta. They are also contemplating a trip to Kansas.

BIG COAL DISCOVERY.

A new vein of coal extending a mile inland and an eighth of a mile in width with an average thickness of twelve feet, has been discovered by the Philadelphia and Reading Coal Company in the Mahoney Valley, Pa. Experts say it contains millions of tons valued at $75,000,000 and will require over fifty years to exhaust it.

NEW BRIDGE AT WATERVILLE.

A Maine Central bridge crew is at work with a pile driver, driving piles near the bridge over the Messalonskee stream commonly called the "Tin Bridge," at Waterville. On these posts will rest a temporary structure over which trains will pass while a new bridge is being placed where the old one now stands. New abutments for the bridge will be built, resting on spiles driven 40 feet into the ground. Great care will be taken to make the foundations as solid as can be done. The workmen have been bothered much by the mud as it goes to a greater depth than was anticipated. The new bridge will be what is called a deck bridge and the ironwork, which has been standing near North street for a month or so, represents all that is latest in bridge construction. When in place the new bridge will be of a strength to stand all the hard knocks which the latest and heaviest rolling stock will give it as it passes over.

A TIMELY QUESTION DEMANDING CONSIDERATION.

"What shall it profiteth a man if he gain the whole world, and lose his own soul?" was asked two thousand years ago.

"What shall it profiteth a man if he comes to Rumford Falls and gets big wages, if he pays it all out in rent," is our great problem at the present time, and some of the aforesaid moral issues are involved.

Some weeks since in an editorial the Citizen took up the subject of rentals, and kindred matters were touched upon, and a few facts ventilated. Because the matter has since received no attention, is not a sign that the issue has been forgotten—in fact the people will not let us forget it, nor do we want to; nor will we, until the matter has been thoroughly threshed out and better conditions obtain.

The Citizen is mindful of the fact that laws of business, written and unwritten, sanction shrewdness and foresight, and uphold men in getting the most possible out of their investments.

We have no desire to attack individual or corporation landlords, the result of whose work has given to Rumford Falls a splendid residential section. On the contrary we would administer praise, for their buildings are well made, and the surroundings pleasant; but if praise is to be meted out in the future, a change will be necessary in the rental system, for at present neither the corporation nor the people are reaping just rewards for their investment and labor.

Two fundamentals form the basis of moral and industrial progression—good homes and good food for the people. These are not lacking in Rumford Falls, and in fact a splendid foundation for a continuance of a happy and prosperous community has been laid. But a storm is brewing, and unless the course is changed these foundations will not prevent the superstructure from being wrecked, and the debris in the wake of the storm will disclose the evidence of shrewdness run to waste—having overreached itself.

Those charged with the direction of affairs are somewhat like a great sea captain whose course had been so long in calm waters, that the storm signals made no impression upon his mind, and he was unprepared for the storm when it overwhelmed him.

The storm now rising can be avoided; but the course must be changed.

The business rule that money invested must be made to yield a certain rate of interest is good. It is also good that the laborer, of whatever kind, should have enough left from his week's wages, after necessary expenses are paid, to feel himself an independent American citizen, at least one day in seven.

In any industrial system where these conditions are lacking, something is wrong; and it is every body's business to find out what, and remedy it.

When a system prevails that easily yields the fair reward for money investment, and compels labor to adopt expedients to make both ends meet, there is more than something wrong—there are several things wrong.

The future prosperity of Rumford Falls may not depend solely upon lower rentals and own home opportunities for the people; but a proper adjustment of these present abnormal conditions, will go a long way towards averting the storm that has sent out ominous advance rumblings.

In this article we will not go into details, for the subject will receive further attention. For the guidance of those whose interests are bound up in a prosperous citizenship, we will observe, that when it becomes necessary for an American—particularly a state of Maine family, to invariably share the home with strangers in order to pay the rent, the door to unsatisfactory metropolitan conditions of social life—conditions inimical to the moral well being of society—is thrown wide open.

The door is about two-thirds open in Rumford Falls. Gentlemen, Sirs, Landlords of Rumford Falls! More than business responsibilities rest upon you! What is your answer?

CUBAN INTERVENTION.

Since our last issue the United States has intervened in Cuba, and the people of this country are facing a problem in government, the solution of which cannot be foretold. It may be easily possible for a condition of affairs to result that would place this country in a position similar to that occupied by Spain, at the time the United States intervened in Cuban affairs in 1898. The cause—the real cause of the present difficulties in Cuba are not easily fathomed. President Palma, who has resigned, to make it possible for Secretary Taft to proclaim himself military governor, is a man of mild and pliable manner, and really owed his position to the government of the United States, or to certain men who were influential in government circles. It may be that his readiness to relinquish power was induced by the same influences.

It may also be true that the rebellion is the result of connivance, the ultimate design of which was just what has happened.

It is of course possible that everything is open and above board, and the conditions are the natural out come of the restlessness and instability of the Cuban people.

In any event the common people of this country cannot look upon the matter with other than feelings of great concern. If there is any connivance it is apparent that President Roosevelt is not a party to it. It seems that certain officials were expecting troops to be well on their way to Cuba when Taft proclaimed himself governor. That they were not, was because the president had given no orders, and not until urgent messages reached him Saturday were the orders issued. If connivance plays any part in the matter, some one failed to carry out his part of the program. The president is absolved from any suspicion in the matter.

It is well known that certain financial interests are well pleased that the outcome is United States control of the island.

As to the general policy of going abroad and buying or borrowing ideas whenever we can find good ones, it should be encouraged. Great as this nation is, it is not in possession of all of the world's available stock of visible supply of wisdom, says the Washington Post. If Japan had been as narrow-minded and bigoted as China, if she had been so much enamored of herself and so contemptuous of "foreign devils" as were the celestials a few years ago and as most of them are to-day, she would have turned her face to the past, her back to the future and continued in that position. But having a splendid equipment of practical sense she sent her most intelligent young men into all progressive countries to gather the results of experience. From those she selected the best and it is only justice to say that in many instances she improved on the best. And that is why Japan has achieved more progress in 50 years than any other country ever made in 500 years.

Speaking of the United States geological survey list of heights, in which are listed 788 places in Maine, the Waterville Sentinel says: It is noticeable that some of the better known heights in Maine are not listed. Among them may be mentioned Adams mountain in Stoneham, Streaked or Monticuous mountain in Buckfield, Nigger Tom mountain in Gilead, Speckled mountain in Grafton, which has near its top a pond claimed to be the highest body of water east of the Rocky mountains, Azilcoos mountain in Lincoln plantation, Mount Farmachee, Saddleback mountain, Mount Blue, near Farmington, Mount Ziree, overlooking Rumford Falls, Squaw mountain, Bearstone mountain, Mount Chase in northern Penobscot, Mars hill, Chairback mountain, Megunticook mountain in Camden, Mount Kinco and numerous others. It is evident that something yet remains to be done in the mapping and topographic surveying of Maine.

The race war that burst into bloody battle in Atlanta, Ga., last week, is another proof that the whites and blacks can not live upon terms of equality in the south; and as northern born and bred men are known to be as fierce in their animosity to the negroes, when living in the south, as the natives, the prospect of getting the negroes into the north with the hope of giving them equality, seems not among the possibilities. The heart bleeds in sympathy for the black race; but that sympathy does not invite the black man to the white man's table; and so long as there are negroes who aspire to the possession of white women, either in lawful wedlock, or otherwise, the race problem will loom up large and be dangerous.

Women are sometimes regarded as likely to lose their heads and grow hysterical with fear in times of sudden danger, but every little while some incident occurs which puts them in another light. An open car filled with passengers ran away down a long hill in New York the other day. When it was found that the car was beyond control many passengers screamed and jumped and some were badly hurt, says the Youth's Companion. A woman who had a baby in her arms stood calmly up in her place, motioned to a man on the street who was watching the approaching car, tossed the baby to him as the car passed, and then sat down. The man caught the baby, and in a few minutes the mother walked back, thanked him, and took the child. Nothing panicky about that!

Munsey's Scrap Book recently gave a list of publications that were among the earlier prints in America, which was quite interesting, and only lacked accuracy in the omission of the name of the Pennsylvania Magazine, printed in Philadelphia in 1774-5 and 6. In that magazine appeared the first plea for the abolition of negro slavery that was ever printed in America.

The Best Selected Stock in this section.

Dainty Imported China.

The many different designs in decorated imported china to be found here are not merely dishes, but they are choice selections of the potters' art that are a little different from the ordinary kind. We try each year to find new styles that are a little more beautiful, a little more exclusive, than the ordinary kinds, and that cost no more. Three new lines of Prussian Pearl finish china, two lines of German Rose decorated, three decorations in the famous Old Ivory, the "Louise" Bavarian in a new treatment of Fruit and Flower decorations, a line of Royal Bayreuth China Vases and novelties, and a large assortment of Japanese china and vases, together with new assortments of 10c. and 25c. china comprise the showing of new china we place before you at the opening of the fall season. Come in and look it over. There's an individuality about china, if well selected, just as much as in dress goods or millinery.

5c. and 10c. Goods.

Our lines of 5c. and 10c. goods have increased so that we find it difficult at times to give them sufficient display room. Not only are our special tables crowded with Kitchen Goods, Toys, Dolls, Stationery, Books, etc., at these popular prices, but many 5c. and 10c. goods may be found as well in the different departments around the store. Better take a saving look around.

Dinner Ware.

We have not space to particularize in regard to dinner ware, but will say that our stock comprises nine different patterns of American, English, French and Austrian china ranging from $8.00 to $30.00 for the regular 112 piece sets, and all sold in single pieces or dozens if desired. We also carry a line of samples of Haviland Dinner Sets at $38.00 to $75.00 on which we can make prompt delivery.

Pictures.

Here's something special. We shall put on sale Saturday morning, Oct. 6th to continue during the following week, One Hundred fine pictures in gilt, brown or antique finished (19 by 15) three inch oval frames, and comprising a large variety of landscape and medallion subjects for 39c. each. We expect for them as quick a sale as on our special line of 10c. Passepartouts during the past two weeks.

Superb Showing of Linens.

A prettier collection we've not shown for many a day. The designs in both damask and napkins are new—different than what has been seen so long. Even in the lower grades, designs are exceedingly attractive. Our specials at 75c. are well worth your attention. In the better grades we have some distinctive designs and special qualities with napkins to match.

Prices of damask 98c., $1.25, $1.39, $1.49 up to $2.00. Napkins to match in both 5-8 and dinner size for $2.49 up to $5.98 per dozen.

Intaglio Engraved Crystal and Gold Glass.

Here is another instance of new and beautiful ware in exquisite and exclusive designs that are not to be found everywhere. The line includes Fruit and Berry Bowls, Nappies, Plates, Handled and Footed Bon Bons, Comports, Baskets and Bowls, made in Steinschoenau, Bohemia, of pure crystal glass with delicate cuttings and engravings which are inlaid with genuine gold leaf, and will not tarnish. The prices are from 50c. to $5.00 each.

Dolls and Toys.

Case after case of playthings for the children are being unpacked and put on our counters, and we are now showing a large line of dolls at 5c., 10c., 15c., 25c., 50c., and $1.00 in Dressed and Undressed Dolls, Kid Body and Rag Dolls, etc. Most of these we are showing now are of the pretty but inexpensive kinds that will keep the children contented from now until Christmas. For a new novelty are rag dolls with photographed faces. Prices are 25c., 50c. and $1.00. We have a very large showing of 10c. toys of all descriptions as well as many kinds of new toys at 25c., 50c., 75c., $1.00 and so on up to $5.00, and every week from now until Christmas will bring new attractions.

When a horse is as overworked as last Friday morning, Frank Weed, 23 years old, shot and killed his friend, Hollis L. Petterson, in Rockland where they both lived. The shooting resulted from pointing a revolver and pulling the trigger, supposing the chambers to be empty.

John O. Burgess of South Portland, was fined $20 and costs last Thursday for selling adulterated milk. The first case of the kind in this state.

CHAPTER X.
PIRATE.

On the opposite side of the road there was a stone wall about five feet in height; beyond this was a broad, rolling field and farther on a barbed wire fence and a boggy stream which oozed its way down toward the Potomac. Far away across the valley the wooded hills were dying and withering and thinning, with splashes of yellow and red. A flock of birds speckled the gloomy October clouds, and a mild breeze sent the grasses shivering.

Toward the wall Pirate directed his course. Warburton threw back his full weight. The effort had little or no effect on Pirate's mouth. His rider remembered about the tree, but the nearest was many yards away. Over the wall they went and down the field. Pirate tried to get his head down but he received a check. Score one for the man. Warburton, his legs stiffened in the stirrups, his hands set down, his breath coming in gasps, wondered where they would finally land. He began to use his knees and Pirate felt the pressure. He didn't like it at all. Oddly enough, Warburton's leg did not bother him as he expected it would, and this gave him confidence. On, on; the dull pounding of Pirate's feet, the flying soil, the wind in his face; and when he saw the barbed wire fence, fear entered into him. An inch too low, a stumble and serious injuries might result. He must break Pirate's gait.

He began to sav cow-boy fashion. Pirate grow indignant; he was being hurt. His speed slackened none, however; he was determined to make that fence if it was the last thing he ever did. He'd like to see any man stop him. He took the deadly fence as with the wings of a bird. But he found that the man was still on his back. He couldn't understand it. He grew worried. And then he struck the red-brown muck bordering the stream. The muck flew, but at every bound Pirate sank deeper, and the knees of his rider were beginning to tell. Warburton, full of rage, yet not unreasonable, quickly saw his chance. Once more he threw back his weight; this time to the left. Pirate's head came suddenly around; his gait was broken, he was floundering in the stream. Now Warburton used his heels savagely. He shortened the reins and whacked Mr. Pirate soundly across the ears. Pirate plunged and reared, and after devious evolutions, reached solid ground. This time his head was high in the air, and, try as he would, he could not tower his neck a solitary inch.

Warburton knew that the animal could not make the barbed wire fence again, so he waited him along till he found a break in the wire. Over this Pirate bounded, snorting. But he had met a master. Whether he reared or plunged, waited or ran, he could not make those ruthless knees relent in their pressure. He began to understand what all beasts understand, sooner or later—the inevitable mastery of man. There was blood in his nostrils. A hand touched his neck caressingly. He shook his head; he refused to conciliate. A voice, kindly but rather breathless, addressed him. Again Pirate shook his head; but he did not run, he cantered. Warburton gave a sigh of relief. Over the field they went. A pull to the left, and Pirate wheeled; a pull to the right, and again Pirate answered, and cantered in a circle. He was mastered.

After this Warburton did as he pleased; Pirate had learned his lesson. His master put him through a dozen maneuvers, and he was vastly satisfied with the victory. He had conquered the horse before the eyes of one woman.

He guided Pirate close to the wall and stopped him, looked down into the girl's wonder-lit eyes and smiled cheerfully. And what is more she smiled faintly in acknowledgment. He had gained, in the guise of a groom, what he might never have gained in any other condition of life, the girl's respect and admiration. Though a thorough woman of the world, high-bred, well-born, she forgot for the moment to control her features; and as I have remarked elsewhere, Warburton was a shrewd observer.

"Bully Mr. Osborne!" shouted William leaping down. "It was simply great!"

"There are some bars farther down," said the girl, quietly. "William, run and open them."

Warburton flushed slightly. He could not tell how she had accomplished it, whether it was the tone or the gesture, but she had calmly re-established the barrier between mistress and servant.

"I think I'll put him to the wall again," said the hero, seized by a rebel spirit.

He wheeled Pirate about and sent him back at a run. Pirate balked. Round he went again, down the field and back. This time he cleared the wall with a good foot to spare. The victory was complete.

When it was all over, and Pirate was impatiently munching an extra supply of oats, the girl bade Mr. James to report early the following morning.

"I hope I shall please you Madam." "Address me as Miss Annesley from now on," she said; and nodding shortly, she entered the house.

To Warburton, half the pleasure of the victory was gone; for not a word of praise had she given him. Yet, she had answered his smile. Well, he had made a lucky out of himself; he had no right to expect anything but $40 a month and orders.

He broke his word with me. He did not return to the house that night for dinner. In fact, he deliberately sent for his things, explaining that he was called north and wouldn't have time to see them before he left. It took all my persuasive oratory to smooth the troubled waters and then there were acres upon which my oil had no effect whatever.

"He is perfectly heartless!" cried Nancy. "He couldn't go to the embassy, but he could steal away and play poker all night with a lot of idling army officers. And now he is going off to Canada without even seeing us to say good-by. Charlie, there is something back of all this."

"I'll bet it's a woman," said Jack, throwing a scrutinizing glance at me. But I was something of a diplomat myself, and he didn't catch me napping. "Here's a telegram for him, too."

"I think I'll take the liberty of opening it," said I. I knew its contents. It was the reply Warburton had depended on. I read it aloud. It is good to have friends of this sort. No question was asked. It was a bald order: "Come up at once and shoot carbou. Take first train."

"Bob's a jackass," was Jack's commentary. I had heard something like it before, that day. "He'll turn up all right,"—and Jack lit a cigar and poked up his paper.

"And Betty Annesley is going to call to-morrow night," said Nancy, her voice overflowing with reproach. Her eyes even sparkled with tears. "I did so want to meet."

I called myself a villain. But I had given my promise; and I was in love myself.

"I don't see what we can do. When Bob makes up his mind to do anything, he generally does it." Jack, believing he had demolished the subject opened his Morning Post and fell to studying the latest phases of the Venezuelan muddle.

Nancy began to cry softly; she loved the scolding as only sisters know how to love. And I became possessed with two desires; to console her and to punch Mr. Robert's head.

"It has always been this way with him," Nancy went on, dabbing her eyes with her two-by-four handkerchief. "We never dreamed that he was going to the army till he came home one night and announced that he had successfully passed his examinations for West Point. He goes and gets shot and we never know anything about it till we read the papers. Next, he resigns and goes abroad without a word or coming to see us. I don't know what to make of Bobby; I really don't."

I took her hand in mine and kissed it, and told her the rascal would turn up in due time, that they hadn't heard the last of him for that winter.

"He's only thoughtless and single-minded," interposed Jack.

"Single-minded!" I echoed. "Why, yes. He gets one thing at a time in his brain, and thinks of nothing else till that idea is worn out. I know him."

I recalled my useless persuasion of the morning. "I believe you are right."

"Of course I'm right," replied Jack, turning a page of his paper. "Do you know where he has gone?"

"I think the telegram explains everything,"—evasively.

"Humph! Don't you worry about him Nan. I'll wager he's up to some of his old-time deviltry."

had put him where he is to-day, at the head of a department.

"Father," said Betty Annesley at the dinner-table that same night, "I have engaged a new groom. He rode Pirate to-day and thoroughly mastered him."

"Pirate? You don't say! Well, I'm glad of that. Pirate will make a capital saddle-horse if he is ridden often enough. The groom will be a safe companion for you on your rides. Are you too tired to do some drawing for me to-night?"

"The fortification plans?" "Yes." His eyes wandering from her face to the night outside. How gray and sad the world was! "You will always love your father, dearie?"

"Love him? Always!" "Whatever betide for weal or woe?"

"Whatever betide." "How easy it was for her to say these words!"

"And yet, some day, you must leave me to take up your abode in some other man's heart. My only wish is that it may beat for you as truly as mine does."

She did not reply, but stepped to the window and pressed her brow to the chilled pane. A yellow and purple line marked the path of the vanished sun; the million stars sparkled above; far away she could see the lights of the city.

Of what was she thinking, dreaming? Was she dreaming of heroes such as we poets and novelists invent and hang upon the puppet-beam? Ah, the pity of these dreams the young girl has! She dreams of heroes and of god-like men and of the one that is to come. But, ah; he never comes; and the dream fades and dies and the world becomes real. A man may find his ideal, but a woman, never, the battle-ground; to old age, a chair in the sunshine and the wreck of dreams!

"The government ought to pay you well if those plans are successful." She moved away from the window.

"Yes, the government ought to pay me well. I should like to make you rich, dearie, and happy."

"Why, daddy, am I not both? I have more money than I know what to do with, and I am happy in having the kindest father." She came around the table and caressed him, cheek to cheek.

"Money isn't everything. It just makes me happy to do anything for you."

His arm grew tense around her waist.

"Do you know what was running through my mind at the embassy last night? I was thinking how deeply I love this great wide country of mine. As I looked at the ambassador and his aides, I was saying to myself, 'You dare not!' It may have been silly, but I couldn't help it. We are the greatest people in the world. When I compared foreign soldiers with our own, how my heart and pride swelled! No formalities, no race prejudice, no false pride. I was never introduced to a foreign officer that I did not fear him, with his weak eyes, his affected mannerisms, his studded rudeness, not to me, but the country I represented.

How I made some of them dance! Not for vanity's sake; rather the inborn patriotism of my race. I had only to think of my father, his honorable scars, his contempt for little things, his courage, his steadfastness, his love for his country, which has so honored him with its true Oh I am a patriot; and I shall never, never marry a man whose love for his country does not equal my own." She caught up her father's mutilated hand and kissed it. "And even now this father of mine is planning and planning to safeguard his country."

"But you must not say anything to a soul, my child; it must be a secret till all is ready. I met Karloff to-day at the club. He has promised to dine with us to-morrow night."

"Make him postpone it. I have promised to dine with Nancy Warburton." "You had better dine with us and spend the evening with your friend. Do you not think him a handsome fellow?"

"He is charming." She touched the bowl of poppies with her fingers and smiled.

"He is very wealthy, too." Betty offered no comment.

"What did they do to that infernal rascal who attempted to run away with you and Mrs. Chadwick?"

"He was arrested and locked up."

"I hope they will keep him there. And what reason did he give the police for attempting to run away with you?"

"He said that he had made a wager with some serving-maids to drive them from the embassy. He claims to have got the wrong number and the wrong carriage."

"A very likely story!"

"Yes, a very likely story!"—and Betty, still smiling, passed on into the music-room, where she took her violin from its case and played some rollicking measures from Offenbach.

At the same time her father arose and went out on the lawn, where he walked up and down, with a long, quick stride. From time to time a waiting note from the violin floated out to him, and he would stop and raise his haggard face toward heaven. His face was no longer masked in smiles; it was grief-stricken, self-abhorring. At length he softly crossed the lawn and stood before the music-room window. Ah, no fretting care sat on yonder face, nor pain, nor trouble; youth, only youth and some pleasant thought which the music had aroused. How like her mother! How like her mother!

Suddenly he smote himself on the brow with a clenched hand. "Wretch! God-forsaken wretch, how have you kept your trust? And how wonder thought which the music had aroused. How like her mother! How like her mother! My honor! My courage and steadfastness! Mockery!"

The Marriage of Darby at the

The social event of Rumford Falls, was the wedding at eight o'clock of the daughter of Mr. Darby of Atlanta, Ga., and Mr. Smith of Rumford Falls. For several weeks the chief topic of conversation in the social circles, both of the town and of the surrounding country, has been the marriage of the daughter of Mr. Darby. The wedding was a most successful affair, and the bride and groom were most happily united. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. Mr. Smith, and the wedding party consisted of the bride, the groom, the bridesmaids, the best man, and the officiating minister. The reception was held at the home of the bride's parents, and the guests were most hospitably entertained.
